

Club reciprocal privileges extend to Army, Navy
Air Force Services Agency Public Affairs

RANDOLPH AIR FORCE BASE, Texas – Air Force Services Agency officials recently changed club policies to extend member benefits to all U.S. armed forces personnel with a valid dues-paying club membership card.

“As part of the joint basing initiative, we reviewed our club membership policies with regard to reciprocal privileges offered to other branches of the U.S. armed forces,” said Col. Sandra Adams, commander of Air Force Services Agency.

“In the spirit of ‘one team one fight,’ current Air Force guidance was revised to extend club privileges and benefits to all dues-paying club members regardless of branch of service,” Colonel Adams said. “Personnel from the other services who pay club dues are offered the same pricing as Air Force club members.”

Full access to Air Force club facilities and services is also available for non members and club members not paying dues. However, these individuals will be charged non-member prices.

The Army and Navy have also agreed to provide reciprocal privileges commensurate with the member’s rank to all U.S. armed forces presenting a valid dues-paying club membership card.

Furthermore, non members, DOD civilians, and their family members may also utilize Army and Navy club facilities, but non-member pricing applies in these situations.
